

How Women Can Get What They Are Truly Worth

Shock figures released by the Equality and Human Rights Commission show that women in some of the UK's leading finance companies receive 80 per cent less pay than their male colleagues.

It is timely therefore that a series of special events are being launched next month finally showing women the secret of closing the Pay Gap and bringing an end to toxic management.

Specifically for women, these workshops which will initially be at Basingstoke before UK roll out, have been devised by conflict resolution specialist Lynda Cant who has many years boardroom experience in a FTSE 100 company as well specialist consultant expertise about issues affecting men and women in the workplace.

We are offering interview opportunities with Lynda Cant and hope you will find space in your publication or broadcasts about how she climbed the executive ladder from being a shorthand typist as well as her latest unique offer and the management battles she has calmed.

As a fellow of the Chartered Institute of Personnel Development Lynda is sought after around the world to cure toxic management and encourage greater understanding of enlightened people management.

As part of their Corporate Social Responsibility, her business, Lead At Work, is offering 4 FREE places worth over £500 each for women who are not offered training at work but need a career boost.

The new leadership workshops this Autumn are designed to fast track careers, boost confidence in the workplace and importantly, encourage women to be paid their worth.

Women can apply for the complimentary training by telling Lynda via her website why they need specialist help. They will be helped and followed as case studies.
